"HOPE 2022"

The Sheila Gopal Raheja Foundation has been deeply involved with various wellness efforts in its commitment to raise the quality of life of children.

The foundation leadership is strongly aligned to providing support and necessary care through its social venture on behalf of the foundation in association with TATA Memorial Hospital and IMPACCT Foundation for Hope. The foundation is dedicated towards taking care of children suffering from life-threatening diseases among several other social initiatives.

The pure motive to organize this event is to teach patients that one must truly believe in the virtue of Celebrating Life to the Fullest. The Theme of HOPE'22 was "Friendship" that witnessed over 200 children who have conquered diseases with their unseeing courage.

SRBS students had the opportunity to be a part of this noble initiative and perform with the little cancer survivors. The event was held in TATA Memorial Hospital Auditorium on December 11 2022 at 9:30 a.m.

As Mrs Durga Sandeep Raheja, Trustee, K Raheja Realty & Founder, Sheila Gopal Raheja Foundation firmly believes - "The Foundation reinforces the belief of spreading happiness and positivity to the pediatric patients and their families. Dear Tejal.

Good evening to you!!!

Sheila Raheja School of Business Management and Research (SRBS) is a prestigious B-School located in Bandra, close to the Business Hub Bandra-Kurla Complex.

Our group has worked hard to create a position of repute n the field of construction, hospitality and education. We have three institutions in our premises - SRBS, LSR School of Architecture and SRIHM. Our promoters, Mr. Sandeep Raheja and Mrs. Durga Raheja, have pursued the path of excellence and inspired everyone to be socially responsible citizens.

As part of our responsibility toward society, we invite you to our Campus on Monday, July 18, 2022. Our auditorium is a perfect place for Tata Memorial Hospital staff to come on a day, date and time which is mutually convenient. As suggested by you, we could look at the Blood Donation Drive on one of the following days - August 1, 2 or 3, 2022.

We would like to involve students, faculty members and administrative/other staff to connect with your esteemed organisation for this noble cause.

Our country celebrates 75 years of independence this year and we feel responsible to initiate our students into Blood Donation Drive along with Tata Memorial Hospital. These youngsters are very enthusiastic and actively participate in such events.

My job is to facilitate this process and work toward organizing a meeting with our Director, Dr. H. J. Bhasin, and you, as the representative of TMH.

Kindly accept our invitation for this Blood Donation Drive of SRBS.

Best regards
Vivek Sharma

The Entrepreneurship Development Cell (EDC) at Sheila Raheja School of Business Management and Research, Bandra (East) hosted “Investment and Trading Yoddha” competition from 22nd August to 9th September, 2022 where each student was given a virtual fund of Rs.10, 00,000 to create their own portfolio.

A large number of students from MMS and BMS participated in this competition. The activity gave students a live experience of money management, risk management, position size, decision making, critical thinking and analytical ability using their general and financial awareness. Different concepts of finance such as portfolio management, investment, maximization of wealth and net worth were also experienced by the students. Also, students got an exposure on how various events all around the world affect the decision making of the investors. The activity was a big success as the students showed great interest along with pleasure.

Success does not come without challenges and this experience of 19 days has shown the students, the ups and downs of the stock market and taught them how to learn from their mistakes and achieve success. This journey has expanded the minds of the students and brought to their notice the importance of time, patience and discipline. “Investment and Trading Yoddha” competition has increased their curiosity of learning and once again emphasized on the dateless fact that “Hard work has no substitute”.

11	9/9/2022 17:53:59	RAASHI	TRIPATHI	BMS (SEM-III)	rashi.tripathi786@gmail.com	8169882766	This competition was great. Usually stock market challenge competitions last up to 3 to 5 days. This competition was quite long that was unexpected but because the competition was long I learn so much. I got the confidence to do short term trading in real market which I wasn't able to do before due to low experience and fear of making mistakes. I am really thankful to the EDC department for organising this. This is probably going to be one of the most memorable parts of my college life. It was fun♥

Chapter: PERFECT COMPETITION

Case Studies: Auction Markets

Flower markets are global. About three quarters of flowers purchased in the United States are imported. More than half the world's cut flowers move through the auction system in the Holland. Five days a week, in a huge building 10 miles outside Amsterdam, some 2,500 buyers gather to participate in Flower Auction Aalsmeer, the largest auction of its kind in the world. Over 20 million flowers and 2 million potted plants from 8,000 growers around the globe are auctioned off each day in the world's largest roofed building, spread across the equivalent of 100 football fields. Flowers are grouped and auctioned off by type—long-stemmed roses, tulips, and so on. Hundreds of buyers sit in theater settings with their fingers on buttons. Once the flowers are presented, a clock-like instrument starts ticking off descending prices until a buyer pushes a button. The winning bidder gets to choose how many and which items to take. The clock starts again until another buyer stops it, and so on, until all flowers are sold. Buyers can also bid online from remote locations. Auctions occur rapidly—on average a transaction takes place every 4 seconds.

This is an example of a Dutch auction, which starts at a high price and works down. Dutch auctions are more common when selling multiple lots of similar, though not identical, items, such as flowers in Amsterdam, tobacco in Canada, and fish in seaports around the world. Because there is some difference among the products for sale in a given market—for example, some flower lots are in better condition than others—this is not quite perfect competition because perfectly competitive markets sell identical products.

More common than the Dutch auction is the English open outcry auction, where bidding starts at a low price and moves up until only one buyer remains. Products sold this way include stocks, bonds, wine, art (think Sotheby's and Christie's), antiques, and livestock. On markets, such as the Chicago Board of Trade, prices for commodities such as wheat, gold, and coffee beans are continuously determined in the trading pits using variations of an open outcry auction.

The birth of the Internet has breathed new life into auctions. Web sites such as eBay, uBid, Yahoo!, and hundreds more hold online auctions for old maps, used computers, wine, airline tickets, antiques, military memorabilia, comic books, paperweights—you name it. The largest online site, eBay, offers over 2,000 categories in a forum that mimics a live auction. Internet auctions allow specialized sellers to reach a world of customers. A listing on eBay, for example, could reach millions of people in more than one hundred countries.

Computers are taking over markets in other ways. In New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, London, and Frankfurt, hand-waving traders in what seem like mosh pits are being replaced by electronic trading. The Nasdaq is the world's first virtual stock market. There is no Nasdaq trading floor as with the New York Stock Exchange. On the French futures exchange, after electronic trading was added as an option to the open-outcry system, electronic trading dominated within a matter of months. Computers reduce the transaction costs of market exchange.

QUESTIONS:

(Q-1) How dutch auction can be a suitable example of perfect competitive market?

(Q-2) How internet has breathed new life into auction?

Chapter: MONOPOLY

Case Studies: Is a Diamond Forever?

In 1866, a child walking along the Orange River in South Africa picked up an odd-looking pebble that turned out to be a 21-carat diamond. That discovery on a farm owned by Johannes De Beers sparked the largest diamond mine in history. When the Great Depression caused a slump in diamond prices, De Beers Consolidated Mines undertook efforts to control the world supply of uncut diamonds and to increase consumer demand for cut diamonds.

The company was able to increase consumer demand through a carefully tailored marketing program. De Beers spends about $200 million a year trying to convince people that diamonds are scarce, valuable, and perfect reflections of love. De Beers' slogan, "A diamond is forever," sends several messages, including (1) a diamond lasts forever, and so should love; (2) diamonds should remain in the family and not be sold; and (3) diamonds retain their value. This slogan is aimed at keeping secondhand diamonds, which are good substitutes for new ones, off the market, where they could otherwise increase supply and drive down the price. De Beers introduced the idea of a diamond engagement ring and more recently the "spirit ring," a diamond worn on a woman's right hand as a sign of independence.

To limit the supply of rough diamonds reaching the market, De Beers invited about one hundred wholesalers to London, where each was offered a box of uncut diamonds for a set price—no negotiating. If De Beers needed to prop up the price of a certain size and quality of diamond, then few of those diamonds would show up in the boxes, thus reducing their supply. The company's actions violated U.S. antitrust laws (Prior to a recent settlement, De Beers executives could have been arrested if they traveled to America). But there were no laws prohibiting U.S. wholesalers from buying from De Beers.

A monopoly that relies on the control of a key resource loses market power once that control slips away. In the mid-1990s, De Beers began losing control of some rough diamond supplies. Russian miners have been selling half their diamonds to independent dealers. Australia's Argyle mine, now the world's largest, stopped selling to De Beers in 1996. And Yellowknife, a huge Canadian mine, began operations in 1998, but De Beers was guaranteed only about one-third of its output. As a result of all this erosion, DeBeers' share of the world's uncut diamond supply slipped from nearly 90 percent in the mid-1980s to only 45 percent in 2007. Worse still for De Beers, newly developed synthetic diamonds are starting to appear on the jewelry market (they already account for 90 percent of industrial diamonds). To counter that threat, De Beers supplies precision equipment to help jewelers spot synthetics.

In a reversal of policy, De Beers has now abandoned efforts to control the world diamond supply. In 2006, the company paid $300 million to settle a number of lawsuits charging anticompetitive practices. The company also agreed to comply with U.S. antitrust laws in the future. De Beers now hopes to become the "supplier of choice" by marketing the DeBeers brand of diamonds at its own jewelry stores. De Beers had a dozen such stores worldwide as of 2007, including those in New York and Beverly Hills. (Americans account for only 5 percent of the world's population but for half the world's retail diamond purchases.) In an effort to differentiate its diamonds, De Beers has started etching its "Forevermark" on some stones, a microscopic engraving of authenticity. Some other diamond suppliers are starting to etch their own marks,

Another problem De Beers and other diamond suppliers face was dramatized by the Hollywood movie Blood Diamond, starring Leonardo DiCaprio. The terms "blood diamonds" and "conflict diamonds" refer to diamonds sold by rebels to fund civil wars that have killed or displaced millions in Africa, the source of much of the world's rough diamonds. Some customers are now asking for "conflict-free" diamonds. For its part, De Beers guarantees that its diamonds are "conflict free." Still, De Beers sales fell 6 percent in 2006, for the first drop in six years in what the company said was a difficult market environment.

De Beers is an example of the legal and practical difficulties of maintaining a profitable monopoly. Once the company's control over uncut diamonds slipped away, so did its monopoly power. After losing that power, the company no longer had an incentive to fight legal prohibitions against its anticompetitive practices.

QUESTIONS:(Q-1) How de Deers efforts control the world supply of uncut diamonds and increase consumer's demand for cut diamonds in a period of Great Depression?

(Q-2) Explain the importance of slogan in Monopoly market situation?

Chapter: MONOPOLY

Case Studies: The Mail Monopoly

The U.S. Post Office was granted a monopoly in 1775 and has operated under federal protection ever since. In 1971, Congress converted the Post Office Department into a semi-independent agency called the U.S. Postal Service, or USPS, which had total revenue of about $70 billion in 2006. More than 700,000 employees at 37,000 post offices deliver an average of 600 million pieces of mail a day to 144 million home and businesses addresses. This amounts to 46 percent of the world's total mail delivery. USPS pays no taxes and is exempt from local zoning laws. It has a legal monopoly in delivering regular, first-class letters and has the exclusive right to use the space inside your mailbox. Other delivery services such as FedEx or UPS cannot use mail boxes or post office boxes.

The USPS monopoly has suffered in recent years because of rising costs and growing competition from new technologies. The price of a first-class stamp climbed from 6 cents in 1970 to 41 cents by 2007—a growth rate double that of inflation. Long-distance phone service, one possible substitute for first-class mail, is much cheaper today than in 1970. New technologies such as email, ecards, online bill-payment, text messaging, and fax machines also displace USPS delivery services (email messages now greatly outnumber first-class letters). Because its monopoly applies only to regular first-class mail, USPS has lost chunks of other business to private firms offering lower rates and better service. The United Parcel Service (UPS), for example, is more mechanized and more containerized than the USPS and thus has lower costs and less breakage. The USPS has tried to emulate UPS but with only limited success. After Hurricane Katrina, it took seven months to reopen the USPS processing and distribution center in New Orleans. Rivals UPS, FedEx, and DHL all restored service in just three weeks.

When the Postal Service raised third-class ("junk" mail) rates, businesses substituted other forms of advertising, including cable TV, telemarketing, and the Internet. UPS and other rivals now account for most ground-shipped packages. Even USPS's first-class monopoly is being threatened, because FedEx and others have captured 90 percent of the overnight mail business. Thus, USPS is losing business because of competition from overnight mail and from new technologies.

USPS has been fighting back, trying to leverage its monopoly power while increasing efficiency. On the electronic front, USPS tried to offer online postage purchases, online bill-paying service, and secure online document transmission service. But these new products were scrapped as failures. In more successful efforts, USPS has partnered with eBay to confirm delivery of auctioned items and expedite payments. And Netflix, the online DVD rental service, relies exclusively on the Postal service to deliver 1.5 million movies a day. USPS also provides some local delivery services—the so-called "last mile"—for several major shippers including DHL, Emery, and FedEx. Changing technology and competition have been eroding USPS's government-granted monopoly in first class mail, but online purchases have increased USPS's package delivery business. In the most recent year, USPS revenue from first class mail decreased 1 percent but revenue from package delivery increased 3 percent.

QUESTIONS:

(Q-1) Why USPS monopoly has suffered in recent years?

(Q-2) What are the measures taken by USPS to overcome such loss?

Chapter: DEMAND, SUPPLY, and Markets

Case Studies: The Market for Professional Basketball

Toward the end of the 1970s, the National Basketball Association (NBA) seemed on the brink of collapse. Attendance had sunk to little more than half the capacity. Some teams were nearly bankrupt. Championship games didn't even merit prime-time television coverage. But in the 1980s, three superstars turned things around. Michael Jordan, Larry Bird, and Magic Johnson created millions of fans and breathed new life into the sagging league. New generations of stars, including Dwayne Wade, Carmelo Anthony, and LeBron James, continue to fuel interest.

Since 1980 the league has expanded from 22 to 30 teams and game attendance has more than doubled. New franchises have sold for record amounts. More importantly, league revenue from broadcast rights jumped more than 40-fold from $19 million per year during the 1978–1982 contract to $785 million per year during the 2002–2008 contract. Popularity also increased around the world as international players, such as Yao Ming of China and Dirk Nowitzki of Germany, joined the league (basketball is now the most widely played team sport in China). NBA rosters in 2007 included more than 70 international players. The NBA formed marketing alliances with global companies such as Coca-Cola and McDonald's, and league playoffs are now televised in more than 200 countries in 45 languages to a potential market of 3 billion people.

What's the key resource in the production of NBA games? Talented players. Exhibit 10 shows the market for NBA players, with demand and supply in 1980 as D_{1980} and S_{1980} . The intersection of these two curves generated an average pay in 1980 of $170,000, or $0.17 million, for the 300 or so players in the league. Since 1980, the talent pool expanded somewhat, shifting the supply curve a bit rightward from S_{1980} to S_{2007} (almost by definition, the supply of the top few hundred players in the world is limited). But demand exploded from D_{1980} to D_{2007} . With supply relatively fixed, the greater demand boosted average pay to $4.9 million by 2007 for the 450 or so players in the league. Such pay attracts younger and younger players. Stars who entered the NBA right out of high school include Kobe Bryant, Kevin Garnett, and LeBron James. (After nine players entered the NBA draft right out of high school in 2005, the league, to stem the flow, required draft candidates to be at least 19 years old and out of high school one year.)

But rare talent alone does not command high pay. Top rodeo riders, top bowlers, and top women basketball players also possess rare talent, but the demand for their talent is not sufficient to support pay anywhere near NBA levels. NBA players earn nearly 100 times more than WNBA players. For example, Diana Taurasi, a great college player, earned only $40,800 her first pro season. Men earn more than women in all professional sports except in tennis, where prize money is the same. Some sports aren't even popular enough to support professional leagues (for example, the U.S. women's pro soccer league folded).

NBA players are now the highest-paid team athletes in the world—earning 60 percent more than pro baseball's average and at least double that for pro football and pro hockey. Both demand and supply determine average pay.

QUESTIONS:

(Q-1) With the help of a given case study explain how demand and supply determined average pay of payers?

(Q-2) Explain the importance of marketing to expand NBA's demand?

Chapter: DEMAND, SUPPLY, and Markets

Case Studies: Rent Ceilings in New York City

New York City rent controls began after World War II, when greater demand for rental housing threatened to push rents higher. To keep prices from rising to their equilibrium level, city officials imposed rent ceilings. Since the quantity demanded at the ceiling price exceeded the quantity supplied, a housing shortage resulted, as was sketched out in panel (b) of Exhibit 11. Thus, the perverse response to a tight housing market was a policy that reduced the supply of housing over time.

Prior to rent controls, builders in New York City completed about 30,000 housing units a year and 90,000 units in the peak year. After rent controls, new construction dropped sharply. To stimulate supply, the city periodically promised rent-ceiling exemptions for new construction. But three times the city broke that promise after the housing was built. So builders remain understandably wary. During the peak year of the last decade only about 10,000 new housing units were built.

The excess demand for housing in the rent-controlled sector spilled into the free-market sector, increasing demand there. This greater demand raised rents in the free-market sector, making a rent-controlled apartment that much more attractive. New York City rent regulations now cover half the 2.1 million rental apartments in the city.

Tenants in rent-controlled apartments are entitled to stay until they die, and with a little planning, they can pass along the apartment to their heirs. Rent control forces tenants into housing choices they would not otherwise make. After the kids have grown and one spouse has died, the last parent standing usually remains in an apartment too big for one person but too much of a bargain to give up. An heir will often stay for the same reason. Some people keep rent-controlled apartments as weekend retreats for decades after they have moved from New York. All this wastes valuable resources and worsens the housing shortage.

Since there is excess quantity demanded for rent-controlled apartments, landlords have less incentive to keep apartments in good shape. A survey found that about 30 percent of rent-controlled housing in the United States was deteriorating versus only 8 percent of free-market housing. Similar results have been found for England and France. Sometimes the rent is so low that owners simply abandon their property. During one decade, owners abandoned a third of a million units in New York City. So rent controls reduce not only the quantity but the quality of housing available.

You would think that rent control benefits the poor most, but it hasn't worked out that way. Henry Pollakowski, an MIT housing economist, concludes that tenants in low- and moderate-income areas get little or no benefit from rent control. But rich people living in a rent-controlled apartment in the nicest part of town get a windfall. Someone in upscale sections of Manhattan might pay only $750 a month for a three-bedroom apartment that would rent for $12,000 a month on the open market.

Once a tenant leaves a rent-controlled apartment, landlords can raise the rent on the next tenant and under some circumstances can escape rent controls entirely. With so much at stake, landlords under rent control have a strong incentive to oust a tenant. Some landlords have been known to pay $5,000 bounties to doormen who report tenants violating their lease (for example, the place is not the tenant's primary residence or the tenant is illegally subletting). Landlords also hire private detectives to identify lease violators. And landlords use professional "facilitators" to negotiate with tenants about moving out. Many tenants end up getting paid hundreds of thousands of dollars for agreeing to move. Some get as much as $2 million. Facilitators can often find tenants a better apartment in the free-market sector along with enough cash to cover the higher rent for, say, 10 years. Since the rental market is in disequilibrium, other markets, such as the market for buying out tenants, kick in.

QUESTIONS:

(Q-1) Under free market sector, why rent control apartments are more attractive in New York city?

(Q-2) How rent controls reduce quantity as well as quality of housing available?

Chapter: PRODUCTION AND COST IN THE FIRM

Case Studies: Scale Economies and Diseconomies at McDonald's

McDonald's experiences economies of scale at the plant, or restaurant, level because of its specialization of labor and machines, but it also benefits from economies of scale at the firm level. Experience gained from decades of selling hamburgers can be shared with new managers through centralized training programs. Costly research and efficient production techniques can also be shared across thousands of locations. For example, McDonald's took three years to decide on the exact temperature of the holding cabinets for its hamburger patties. What's more, the cost of advertising and promoting McDonald's through sponsorship of world events such as the Olympics can be spread across 30,000 restaurants in more than 100 countries.

Some diseconomies may also arise in such large-scale operations. The fact that the menu must be reasonably uniform across thousands of locations means that if customers in some parts of the country or the world do not like a product, it may not get on the menu, even though it might be popular elsewhere. Another problem with a uniform menu is that the ingredients must be available around the world and cannot be subject to droughts or sharp swings in price. For example, McDonald's considered adding a shrimp salad to the menu but decided not to when advised the move could deplete the nation's shrimp supply.

McDonald's has moved aggressively into overseas markets (10 percent of the beef sold in Japan goes into McDonald's hamburgers). Planning across so many markets has grown increasingly complex. For example, McDonald's is kosher in Israel, closes five times a day for Muslim prayer in Saudi Arabia, and serves mutton burgers in India, where cows are worshiped, not eaten. Running a worldwide operation also exposes the company to country and regions risks, such as environmental protests in Brazil, mad-cow disease in Europe, and terrorist bombings of outlets in France, Indonesia, Russia, and Turkey.

Change usually comes slowly in some large corporations, but the profit motive is forcing McDonald's to reinvent itself. McDonald's has reorganized its U.S. operation into regions, allowing managers in each region more leeway in pricing and promotion. McDonald's has also become more flexible by putting mini-restaurants in airports, gas stations, and Wal-Marts. The company plan for 2007 called for opening 800 new restaurants and closing 400 unprofitable ones. And McDonald's has reduced the time required to develop new products. For example, whereas Chicken McNuggets were seven years in development, Chicken Wraps took less than a year. This greater flexibility across countries and regions, the increased willingness to close unprofitable restaurants, and the reduction in product development time all reflect McDonald's effort to cope with diseconomies of scale.

QUESTIONS:

(Q-1) State the difference between economies of scale and dis Economics of scale with the help of a given case study.

(Q-2) What are the measures taken by McDonald's to resolved dis Economics of scale?

Chapter: CONSUMER CHOICE AND DEMAND

Case Studies: Water, Water, Everywhere

Centuries ago, economists puzzled over the price of diamonds relative to the price of water. Diamonds are mere bling—certainly not a necessity of life in any sense. Water is essential to life and has hundreds of valuable uses. Yet diamonds are expensive, while water is cheap. For example, the $10,000 spent on a one-carat diamond could buy about 10,000 bottles of water or about 1.6 million gallons of municipally supplied water (which sells for about 60 cents per 100 gallons in New York City). However measured, diamonds are extremely expensive relative to water. For the price of a one-carat diamond, you could buy enough water to last a lifetime.

How can something as useful as water cost so much less than something of such limited use as diamonds? In 1776, Adam Smith discussed what has come to be called the diamonds-water paradox. Because water is essential to life, the total utility derived from water greatly exceeds the total utility derived from diamonds. Yet the market value of a good is based not on its total utility but on what consumers are willing and able to pay for an additional unit—that is, on its marginal utility. Because water is so abundant in nature, we consume it to the point where the marginal utility of the last gallon purchased is relatively low. Because diamonds are relatively scarce compared to water, the marginal utility of the last diamond purchased is relatively high. Thus, water is cheap and diamonds expensive. As Ben Franklin said, “We will only know the worth of water when the well is dry.”

Speaking of water, sales of bottled water are growing faster than any other beverage category—creating an $12 billion U.S. industry, an average of 23 gallons per person in 2006. Bottled water ranks behind only soft drinks in sales, outselling coffee, milk, and beer. The United States offers the world’s largest market for bottled water—importing water from places such as Italy, France, Sweden, Wales, even Fiji. “Water bars” in Boston, New York, and Los Angeles offer bottled water as the main attraction. A nine ounce bottle of Evian water costs $1.49. That amounts to $21.19 per gallon, or about 10 times more than gasoline. You think that’s pricey? Bling H2O is available in bottles decorated with Swarovski crystals and sells for $35—that’s about 80 times more than gasoline.

Why would consumers pay a premium for bottled water when water from the tap costs virtually nothing? After all, some bottled water comes from municipal taps. First, many people do not view the two as good substitutes. Some people have concerns about the safety of tap water, and they consider bottled water a healthy alternative (about half those surveyed in a Gallup Poll said they won’t drink water straight from the tap). Second, even those who drink tap water find bottled water a convenient option away from home. People who buy bottled water apparently feel the additional benefit offsets the additional cost.

Fast food restaurants now offer bottled water as a healthy alternative to soft drinks. McDonald’s, for example, offers Dasani with its “Go Active Happy Meal.” The soft-drink industry views bottled-water as a threat. But if you can’t fight ‘em, join ‘em: Pepsi’s Aquafina is the top-selling U.S. brand of bottled water, and Coke’s Dasani ranks second.

QUESTIONS:

(Q-1) Explain Diamond - Water paradox?

(Q-2) Why bottle water cost more then tap water?

Chapter: MONOPOLISTIC COMPETITION AND OLIGOPOLY

Case Studies: Timely Fashions Boost Profit for Zara

One way a firm can increase market power is to offer a differentiated product. Zara, the largest fashion retailer in Europe, has been described as “possibly the most innovative and devastating retailer in the world.” The company makes nearly all its clothing in its own workshops and factories, including designing, fabric dyeing, tailoring, and ironing. Just about all the clothing is produced in Arteixo, Spain, where Zara operates 14 factories connected by tunnels to a giant distribution center. In a matter of hours, that center fills up with clothing.

Zara’s retail shops and clothing factories communicate through a sophisticated feedback mechanism for gathering market intelligence and putting it to work. Sales associates carry personal digital assistants to relay information on fashion trends and customer demand back to the company’s team of 200 designers in Spain. Real-time sales data allow the factory to increase production of items that are selling and to bring out similar designs. By doing everything in-house, Zara avoids the delay involved with manufacturing in a low cost country such as China. Direct shipments from factory to shops also eliminate the need for costly warehouses.

Zara takes as little as two weeks to develop a new item and deliver it to one of its more than 1,000 retail stores. The industry average is nine months. The company launches about 10,000 new designs a year, making new items in small batches at first; so, if something doesn’t sell, there is not much left over. But if something catches on, stores can restock in a few days, so Zara doesn’t miss out on a fashion wave. Thus, shops never have to wait long for fresh stock or to get an order filled. Whereas traditional stores such as the Gap may get new fashions twice a season, Zara distributes them twice a week. And in perhaps its most unusual of strategies, the company advertises little, relying instead on prime store location and word of mouth.

In short, Zara believes that making its own apparel rather than outsourcing production to a lower cost country reduces delays, exploits customer feedback, maintains flexibility, and ensures quality. This ready supply of new clothing lines and continuous supply of popular items help Zara differentiate its products. Amancio Ortega, Zara’s founder, opened his first store in 1975. His wealth in 2007 reached an estimated $24 billion, ranking him the 8th richest person on the planet. The market rewards successful innovation.

(Q-1) How does zara differentiate its clothing?

D.O. M-16011/2/2021-YN

Dated: 25th January, 2021

I am writing this in connection with the 7th International Day of Yoga (IDY), scheduled to be observed on the 21st of June 2021. As you are aware, at the initiative of the Shri Narendra Modi, Hon'ble Prime Minister of India, the United Nations General Assembly (UNGA) had taken a historic decision in 2014, to declare the 21st of June as the International Day of Yoga (IDY). Since then, this day has been observed all over the world with considerable zeal and vigour. As you would agree, this worldwide acceptance of Yoga is a matter of pride for our country, as Yoga is an integral part of our cultural heritage.

The preparations for IDY-2021 are already underway and there is immense potential to utilize this occasion to remind people across the globe about the benefits of Yoga. The objective is to build an enduring public interest in Yoga, by highlighting its importance and contribution as a significant asset for improving public health and emotional wellness, inspire the people to continue the practice of Yoga beyond the IDY.

Just like IDY-2020, IDY-2021 will also be a COVID - compliant event, based on the prevailing directions of the Government of India (GoI) and concerned State Governments/Union Territories at that point of time, as the situation continues to evolve. Ministry of AYUSH is looking forward to greater participation from the people in IDY-2021 than the preceding years. The Central Ministries and their Nodal Officers have always played a very significant role in taking the event forward an inclusive way and Ministry of AYUSH looks forward to the continued involvement from their end.

With this backdrop, I seek your support in this effort to make the IDY, a nation-wide campaign for public health. A Nodal Officer of your Ministry/Department (not below Deputy Secretary) may kindly be nominated and the details may be communicated to Shri P. N. Ranjit Kumar, Joint Secretary, Ministry of AYUSH to the Government of India (Tel: 011-24651938; e-mail: ranjitkumar-pn@gov.in) for

Dear Shri Amitji,

I am writing this in continuation with letter of even No. dated 25.01.2021 regarding observation of seventh International Day of Yoga i.e., IDY 2021. The preparations for the IDY 2021 are already under way. The objective is to build an enduring public interest in Yoga by highlighting its importance and contribution as a significant asset for improving public health. Ministry of AYUSH is looking forward for greater participation from the people in IDY 2021 than the preceding years. Just like IDY 2020, IDY 2021 will also be a Covid-compliant event based on the leading directions of the Government at that point of time. There will be greater focus on virtual activities.

There are multiple avenues within the domain of Ministry of Education (MoE) to take the event forward with momentum and this Ministry looks forward to an active collaboration with Education Ministry. I have listed a few indicated areas of collaboration as Annexure of this letter for your consideration.

Apart from the aforementioned activities, Ministry of Education (MoE) may please also take up initiatives as deemed appropriate, which can be jointly agreed upon and undertaken by both the Ministries, to help promote Yoga globally and enhance participation in the IDY 2021.

With this backdrop, I seek your support in this effort to make the IDY a nation-wide campaign for public health. A Nodal Officer of your Ministry (preferably at the level of Joint Secretary) may kindly be nominated and the details may please be communicated for any coordination with Ministry of AYUSH, Shri P. N. Ranjit Kumar, Joint Secretary (Tel: 011-24651938; e-mail: ranjitkumar-pn@gov.in) or Shri Vikram Singh, Director (Tel: 011-24656863; e-mail: vjkrmsingh-cea@gov.in) may please be contacted.

Ministry of AYUSH would be keen to hear about the activities and the best practices that Ministry of Education puts in place for IDY 2021. I would also request you to share your plan of action along with suggestions if any, with this Ministry so that the best practices can be further shared with the other Ministries and Departments.

INTERNATIONAL DAY OF YOGA 2021(IDY-2021)

Background Note

1. The rewards of Yoga for disease prevention and health promotion are well known. They have acquired special significance against the backdrop of Covid-19. The International Day of Yoga 2021 presents an occasion to underline the health benefits of Yoga, and motivate the public to take up the pursuit of Yoga.
2. Taking cognizance of the current situation, it is not advisable to organize events that require congregation of people for observing IDY 2021. Therefore, it is advised that maximum use of digital, virtual and electronic platform be made this year. All stake-holders are invited to take up messaging to the public by highlighting the importance and contribution of IDY to public health, and encouraging the people to observe IDY 2021 by doing the Common Yoga Protocol (CYP) at home with their families, on 21st June 2021. For this, the message "Be with Yoga, Be at Home!" can be sent out as much stakeholders as possible.
3. An "IDY Handbook" (https://www.ayush.gov.in/publicassets/IDY_Handbook.pdf) has been developed by Ministry of AYUSH keeping in mind the current pandemic situation – lending focus predominantly on mobilization activities in the online/virtual mode. In addition to bringing back the key message of following COVID Appropriate Behaviour (CAB) to ensure personal health and wellbeing, these activities can be undertaken through digital media. The Handbook, through the standardization of activities will help to strengthen the collaborations among different stakeholders in organizing activities for IDY 2021.
4. IDY presents an occasion for all the Central Ministries and their Departments, State and UT Administrations, Yoga Organizations and Voluntary Organizations, to come forward and spread the message about gains from the regular practice of Yoga. With their commitment and passion, all these organizations can play an important role in making IDY an effective national movement for health and wellness.

5. Stake-holders are requested to reach out to individuals and other organizations in their respective domains, with the following IDY related activities –

- Issuing internal guidelines within the organization/offices giving the background of the observation of International Day of Yoga (IDY) 2021. This may be displayed prominently on their websites.
- Using your social media platforms to spread for latest updates and information about IDY. The required inputs can be easily accessed from the social media platforms of the M/o AYUSH and this can be shared on or adapted to the official social media platforms, as deemed fit.
- Displaying IDY logo on the website and uploading guidelines for IDY observance on the website.
- Familiarizing the employees/staff with Common Yoga Protocol (CYP). Information about the quality digital training resources and daily virtual training sessions being offered by the Morarji Desai National Institute of Yoga (MDNIY), an autonomous institute under M/o AYUSH may be widely publicized among the public and the staff. Organising online training programmes on CYP and ensuring maximum participation in the same, in a COVID-19 compliant manner can be considered.

Webinar on "Post Covid Impact on MSME"

Date: - 3rd July 2021

Sheila Raheja School of Business Management and Research organized a webinar on Post Covid Impact on MSME for MMS students. The objective of this program was to acclimatize the students on how are the MSME's coping with pandemic. The seminar was conducted virtually (on Google meet) on 3rd July 2021.

The session began with welcoming the Guest. Dr. R. Gopal started his speech by highlighting the reforms and changes in the MSME sector that has given high value to the Indian economy and has significantly contributed to the economic and social development of the country by fostering entrepreneurship and generating large employment opportunities.

Later, students were acquainted with the Post Covid impact on MSME covering the following points:-

- The COVID-19 pandemic had a widespread impact on MSMEs. MSMEs experienced uneven flow of business activities and sustainability. Most MSMEs faced the challenge of keeping their financial wheels turning during the lockdown period due to less or almost no business activities, weak demand, and low consumer confidence.

playing field in the country will not only increase the competitiveness of our exporters but also reduce imports of the items where India has domestic capabilities.

- Export income is requested to be made tax free for MSMEs for 3 years. This will help in partly compensating the additional cost of logistics and other bottlenecks which Indian exporters face. MSMEs not only play crucial role in providing large employment opportunities at comparatively lower capital cost than large industries but also help in industrialization of rural & backward areas, thereby, reducing regional imbalances, assuring more equitable distribution of national income and wealth. This characteristic of MSMEs of low capital cost of creating jobs relative to big industries should be capitalised and encouraged further.
- Further, the focus should be on ensuring provision of hassle free disbursement of loans vis-à-vis enhanced liquidity for MSMEs, especially in rural sectors. The banking sector must fully percolate the significant cut in repo rate announced by the RBI during the last few months.
- Lesser compliances for MSMEs will create visible ease of doing business at the ground level and a lower tax regime will increase the personal disposable income of the people and create an overall virtuous circle of growth and development in the economy.
- Extreme support to MSMEs and Startups is seriously required to save them from the impact of pandemic COVID -19. It is suggested that the value chains of MSMEs should be enhanced further, thus, making them more structurally competent to add to their efficiency and hence the country's overall export growth momentum.

The session concluded with vote of thanks.

Testimonial

I am immensely satisfied with the program. In the beginning, we all were extremely apprehensive about what to expect. We had no idea about Capital Markets or how to trade in the Stock market. But Prof. Rahul Sanghavi taught us all the concepts along with practical examples. I am really thankful to SRBS and Prof. Rahul Sanghavi for the invaluable knowledge passed on to us.
- Jinal Ashok Patel

The lectures delivered by Prof. Rahul Sanghavi were totally amazing and extremely informative. As a novice in the field, I always felt like I was missing out on something. That is the reason I opted for this program. I got to learn a lot about the highs and lows of the market. I also learnt what technical analysis is all about. I had a great time attending these sessions. Thank you Prof. Sanghavi. You taught me a lot and I am now applying all that in real life situations.- Pankil Haresh Mehta
